You may have heard a lot about the Kindertransport rescue of Jewish children from Germany to Britain in the late 1930s.

But have you ever heard of Kitchener refugee camp in Kent, UK?

After the Kindertransport, Kitchener camp (also known as Richborough transit camp) provided the next most significant rescue of Jews from Germany, Austria, and Czechoslovakia in 1939, but almost nobody knows anything about these events.

This is an important part of our history, and at the moment many of its documents and photographs are sitting in families' cupboards, and in suitcases, and in files ...

We would like to recruit your help in collecting together this important historical information about Kitchener camp and its refugees, which was in operation in Britain from January 1939 until after the outbreak of World War Two.
